In this video I would like to talk about what the NIMS company has to offer, specifically the NIMS SDK. It is something that helps web developers to deliver the best experience to their website visitors. Let's take a look at what this exciting technology has to offer. NIMS SDK description: "NIMS SDK is a web development toolkit based on NIMS that will help to build web applications and run them on NIMS web platform. SDK provides an object model for the development of NIMS platform web applications, as well as an API and a JDK that can be used to manipulate NIMS platform objects. It allows NIMS platform access to the Java EE APIs." NIMS SDK is not yet finished, it is a work in progress. It's a very promising technology, I can't wait to use it. So how does the NIMS SDK help web designers and developers? NIMS SDK is a plugin for the Eclipse IDE, making coding much easier. It allows you to develop your code in the browser, using HTML, JavaScript and CSS. With NIMS SDK you can: easily connect Java to NIMS. easily create your own Java classes. easily create your own NIMS sessions, components and workflows. easily create your own Java Server Faces (JSF) components. easily create your own NIMS platform-specific page styles. The NIMS SDK is only available in the browser mode. The rest of this post is going to be the same. What you can do with the NIMS SDK: You can dynamically generate Java code from a web application. You just write JavaScript and HTML, as if your application was running in the browser. Then you use the server side to generate code, you get Java source code in return. You can take advantage of Java on the server side. You can create complex client side interfaces, including the ability to remove components
